Chowing down: Stewart hosts 4th Annual Food Fair at Club Stewart

Pfc. Ricardo Branch

Staff Writer

Soldiers and family members at Fort Stewart recently participated in the Spring Food Fair, an event to showcase future meals for dining facilities at Club Stewart May 4.

Eighteen vendors showcased different types of meals catering to Soldiers of many backgrounds and cultures.

"We are here today to help expand the offerings to the military and get them a variety of foods for all ethnic types," said Michael Beck, military development manager at Fort Stewart.

"This forum today is an excellent opportunity to give private vendors a chance to showcase their products to the military," Beck said. "We are trying to help streamline the cost and lower the prices to make a better, more efficient meal for the Army."

"Many of the meals we have here take very little time, labor and have no waste left over," said Tom Tannery, vice president Rich Products, a dairy smoothie maker.

During the fair, members of the military took the time to sample dishes from Italian, Mexican and South American meals, among other types.

"This is a great chance to see new ideas and different ways for us to make better meals for the dining facility," said Pfc. Tina Lemieux, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Infantry Division.

"My husband told me about the food here today, so we came to try all the different foods and see what they might offer the dining facilities in the future," said Deborah

Families visit Stewart cemeteries

Nearly 40 people whose families once called Fort Stewart home returned to participate in the Spring Tour 2004 of Historic Sites and Cemeteries May 6 at Stewart.

The tour allowed the people a chance to visit the final resting places and pre-Stewart towns of some of their loved ones.

"Returning to Fort Stewart is part of an agreement with the military," said Barbara Shuptrine, a Taylor's Creek family member.

"When the families living in the towns of Green Bay, Fort Argyle, Trinity and Cypress Slash moved out, many thought about the loved ones being left behind in the cemeteries," Shuptrine said. "The Army, therefore, promised to maintain the graves and allow the families to return a couple times a year to see them."

For many people a visit to Stewart signified more than seeing graves. Some people like the descendants of the Jacobs family have not been back in a long time.

"This is like my first time here. I don't really remember living here because I was two when we left," said Emily Norton, member of Jacobs's family.

"This is my first time back in 62 years," said Russel Jacobs. "Back then I was 7-years-old and still in elementary school."

"I'm thrilled to be here and don't remember a lot, but it still brings interesting feelings coming to the place you spent your childhood," he added.

"The older you get, the more you appreciate family heritage and history," said Danny Strickland, a Taylor's Creek descendant.

"Many of my relatives and friends were pushed out of

The city of Glennville honored its most prominent produce at the 28th Annual Glennville Sweet Onion Festival Saturday.

The festival kicked off with a parade down Georgia highway 144 through the center of downtown Glennville. People on floats representing different onion farms threw candy to children watching the parade. Beauty queens waved to the crowd from thrones mounted on trailers. Clowns drove by in modified go-karts that looked like miniature sports cars and sport utility vehicles.

The 3rd Infantry Division color guard and band marched in the parade, and were cheered on by parade goers. Maj. Gen. William G. Webster Jr., 3rd Inf. Div. commander and division Command Sgt. Maj. Julian Kellman, were also in the parade, and waved to onlookers as they passed.

"Thank you for inviting us to participate," Webster said during a speech to listeners at the festival.

"This is a great honor for us to be here and I know our Soldiers are having a great time. Thanks for all the great things you do for us and our families."

Arts and crafts were on sale, as well as sweet onions by the sackful. There were pony rides and all types of southern cooking.

"This is a good thing to do for our community, and I'm doing my part," said Spc. Lance R. Commins, a clarinet player with the band. "I'm going to get something to eat and check things out. I am proud to be out here representing the Army."

Cash prizes were given to the growers of the three largest onions in Tatnall County, and State Representative Terry Barnard presented the second largest onion to Webster on behalf of the people of Glennville.

"It's a real honor for me to be here today with the mayor, sheriff, police chief and all of you to represent the terrific Soldiers of our Army and your neighbor, the 3rd Infantry Division and Fort Stewart," Webster said. "On behalf of all these Soldiers, I'd like to extend our best wishes to all of you for a very productive and successful Sweet Onion Festival."

friends were pushed out of here, so I come to places like this to try and teach my kids and family a little bit about their roots," Strickland said. "It was hard to give up a place like this back then because the area is good cultivated land. We appreciate the military giving us an opportunity to come back and see the places many of us grew up in."

For other people Stewart was a way for them to get in touch with their background.

"My husband grew up at Fort Argyle, so it's part of my heritage," said Jane Jacobs.

"Your heritage determines who you are, so it is important to preserve and remember it," Jane said. "You lose a large part of your history if you don't preserve it."

"The Army has been very supportive about us coming to visit every time," said Danalyn Akins. "Just being allowed to return makes this day worth it because many people here have never seen their parents' home and with visiting today a longing in their heart has been fulfilled."

"With what's happening in the world today, meals are the most important thing of the day for a Soldier. Anything possible to make a better more enjoyable meal is important for us to try and provide," Beck said.

"We very rarely have an opportunity to have a food show at Fort Stewart based on our tight training schedule," said Warrant Officer John Nelums, division food service advisor. "The intent of this whole show is to expose Soldiers to new food products from nationally known vendors and incorporate them into the menus of our dining facilities. This is an excellent opportunity for the food service and vendors to work together and take advantage of all they can offer one another."

"It makes me feel good to be representing my company to the military and showing them the new foods we have available," Tannery said. "This food fair is just one way for us to show our appreciation for what Soldiers do for us."

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

Our daily bread

Chaplain (Maj.) Timothy Bonner
Special to The Frontline

One of the publications that the soldiers in our battalion love to read is Our Daily Bread. This little devotional book, first published in 1956, gives the reader daily sustenance from the Word of God. Each day's reading consists of scripture, a devotional thought, a poem, and an application of the reading. The title of the publication comes from Matt. 6:11, where Jesus in the Model Prayer exhorts us to ask God to give us "our daily bread."

We find this principle of God giving us what we need today throughout scripture. Adam had to work for his food once he was cast out of the Garden of Eden, but he always grew enough to put bread on the table.

In the Old Testament the Israelites were given daily bread, called manna, each day that they lived in the wilderness. Except for a two-day supply at the end of the week there was never enough to save for tomorrow, but there was always enough for today. In 1 Kings we read that the prophet Elijah was hungry and God used the ravens to bring him the food he needed to survive. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus reminds us that God will meet our daily needs for food, clothing, and shelter, just as He cares for the birds, flowers, and grass.

To get the spiritual nutrition we need we must connect with Jesus, the Bread of Life.

In John 6 He compared the manna from Heaven that the Israelites received with the true bread that God gives. Jesus was referring to a relationship with Him. The point of His comparison was that if Jesus lives inside you then you will never grow spiritually hungry because God is always close beside you, no matter what trials you may face. Jesus will always give us an adequate supply of daily spiritual nutrition.

It's no wonder, then, that Jesus taught His disciples to pray for daily bread. Matt. 6:34 commands us to "not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will take care of itself. Each day will have trouble of its own." We get so caught up worrying about the future that we never take time to live in and enjoy the present. Each day is a gift from God. Yes, we need to plan for future events like deployments, PCS moves, and retirements. We don't need to obsess about these things. God took care of us yesterday and has met our needs today. There is no reason to believe that He can't or won't do the same tomorrow.
