Deranged Minds, first place winners of the Variety Talent Show Saturday, wail and jam their tunes.

Stars on the rise at Stewart

Pfc. Jacqueline Watson
Staff Writer

Not many would argue that Fort Stewart is home to a host of talented individuals. With all the different occupations here, from chefs to doctors to television anchors, gifts and abilities abound. And most of these are out in the open, for everyone to see and appreciate on a daily basis.

But some of Fort Stewart's talent is slightly more hidden from the public eye.

Saturday night, that hidden talent showed itself at the 2004 Army Festival of the Performing Arts Variety Talent Show, put together by the Fort Stewart department of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

The show, which lasted nearly two hours, included performances by rock music groups, rap artists, gospel and country music singers, and even a comedian. As each one gave it his all, a panel of judges watched and listened to determine to whom they would give first place.

MWR had cash prizes to give away, and three places to award for the evening's show, said Tom Matheny, MWR recreation special events coordinator. He and Larry Cutchens, MWR chief of recreation, had worked to make the show a reality.

It had been a couple of years since Stewart has put on a talent show like this, Matheny said. He anticipated a good turnout to the event.

"My boyfriend and I are going to be performing the Faith Hill song, 'There You'll Be,'" said Michelle Hoffman moments before the talent show began. "I'm really excited."

Most performing artists of the evening were feeling confident.

"I've got this," said Jerome Carter Jr., who was slated to sing "Amazing Grace" - "with a twist."

Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Crawford said he thought he would do pretty well, and that he hoped to use the winnings to do some traveling.

"I'm here to tickle your funny bone," said Sgt. Gabriel "Osirus the Virus" Osirus, who would be going on the stage to do his comedy act. "I'm trying to break into the business. I've been doing this for about three years or so, and it's all original work."

The night kicked off with two songs by original gothic rock band Morbid Children, headed by frontman and vocalist Chris Glass. The band got a good response from the crowd for both of their songs.

Children put on ageless show ...

'Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs' comes to Stewart

Pfc. Ricardo Branch

Students of Fort Stewart recently got a chance to show their acting ability in two performances of the play "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" at Woodruff Theater Aug. 14.

"The cast of the play auditioned for the show at the beginning of the week and had been rehearsing for just a few days before performing for the community," said Sgt. 1st Class Karl Moody, 4th battalion, 64th Armor Regiment.

He said they did an outstanding job and that the kids put a lot of effort in their performances and were rewarded with a good turnout from their friends, family and the community.

Many people turned out to watch the show, which resulted in a packed theater. All of the people attending to see the kids for a variety of reasons, some to support their kids or friends, but many just came to see a good show.

"My kids never saw a play performed before, so I wanted to bring them out to see a good one," said Cristina Helsel.

"It was really neat to see how the two people from

A bug is a bug, right?

Laurie Kemp and Maj. Sofi Ibrahim

Winn PAO and Fort Stewart Entomologist

In most minds, everything ugly with more than four legs is a creepy-crawly bug, right?

In technical terms, wrong. Arthropod, meaning jointed-foot is a much more accurate word to describe a creepy-crawly, whether it has six, eight or more legs. The term arthropod describes more than 846,000 varieties of land and sea creatures.

But a term easier to grasp than arthropod and more accurate than bug, is insect.

And Fort Stewart's lush forests and semi-open plains are the homes to hundreds, perhaps thousands, of species of insects and arachnids.

Some spread diseases caused by bacteria, viruses and parasites, some help the environment and others are just plain avoidable due to their poisonous nature.

Insects and arachnids that spread diseases

Anyone living in Southeast Georgia already knows that mosquitoes, ticks, fleas and Horse, Deer and Yellow Flies can spread disease. But did you ever stop to think about what cockroaches and houseflies can spread?

Some insects like mosquitoes, fleas and midges, and some arachnids like ticks and mites can spread disease by direct transmission when they bite, said Dr. (Maj.) Sofi Ibrahim, Fort Stewart entomologist, but cockroaches and houseflies spread disease through mechanical transmission.

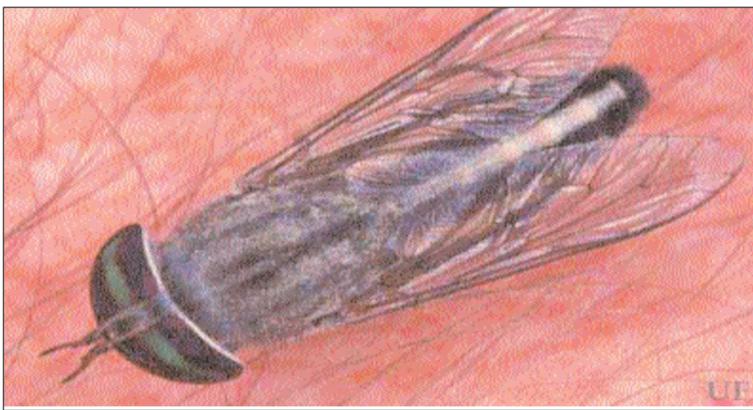

Cockroaches and Houseflies

"Cockroaches and houseflies have hairy appendages (legs, antennae and body bristles) and when it goes somewhere unclean it will pick up the microbes and when it comes into contact with food or drink, it will contaminate the area it visits, therefore transmitting the microbes," Ibrahim said.

There are typically two types of cockroaches in this area — German and American. According to Ibrahim, German roaches are smaller and prefer the kitchen while American roaches are larger and prefer the bathroom. Both types of roaches have wings and are able to fly short distances.

And if you're one of the

people who tries to distinguish whether it is a Palmetto bug or a roach, you're in for a surprise. Palmetto bug is just a polite way of saying 'American Cockroach.'

Cockroaches alone can transmit more than 500 organisms, including salmonella, coliform molds, streptococci and staphylococci. Houseflies can transmit typhoid fever, dysentery, cholera and it is suspected it can also transmit tuberculosis.

While the potential looms, the risk for these insects spreading these diseases in your home is low. Still, Ibrahim recommends keeping a clean kitchen and bathroom and setting cockroach baits.

Mosquitoes

Mosquitoes in this area can transmit West Nile virus, Eastern Equine encephalitis, St. Louis encephalitis and the La Crosse virus. The risk, though relatively low, does exist but is easily avoidable with the right precautions.

These precautions should include wearing long sleeves and pants when going into a wooded area, the use of insect repellants (10-30 percent DEET is recommended), avoiding the outdoors during dusk and dawn when mosquitoes are at their peak and staying away from areas with standing water.

Similar precautions can be used to avoid ticks, fleas and other flies.

Horse, Deer and Yellow Flies

Horse, Deer and Yellow Flies are fierce biters typically found around horse stables, farms and in areas of the woods with a lot of deer.

These insects can transmit Tularemia, Loiasis (eye problem caused by parasitic worms) and possibly Lyme disease. According to Ibrahim, these flies have "mouthparts like a knife - like a serrated knife."

However, due to their saw-like mouth parts, these insects are not very efficient at direct transmission of diseases.

Fleas

There are many types of fleas - The common ones are the human, dog, cat and rat fleas. Fleas can carry Murine typhus and the plague microbes. The rat flea typically transmits the plague and the cat flea Murine typhus.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, outbreaks of plague still occur in rural communities and cities in the U.S averaging 10 to 15 cases each year. These cases usually occur when people come in close contact with rodent habitats.

The last urban epidemic occurred in Los Angeles in 1924-1925.

Ticks

Ticks are not insects. They are arachnids. Arachnids are easily distinguishable from insects by their eight legs, while insects have 6 legs. There are three types of ticks in this area- Lone Star, Black Legged or Deer tick and the American Dog tick.

Most commonly known is the Black Legged or Deer tick because it can carry Lyme Disease.

However, the other two types of ticks may also carry disease. The Lone Star and American Dog tick can carry Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, Human Ehrlichiosis (similar to Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever) and Tularemia or Rabbit fever.

Precautions for avoiding ticks include wearing long sleeves and pants when going into a wooded area, the use of insect repellants, walking in the center of paths to avoid touching trees and bushes and using the buddy system.

Ibrahim recommends families and friends look each other over for ticks because "you will not always know it is there."

If a tick is spotted, it should be removed promptly, but safely.

The correct way to remove a tick is with clean tweezers. Never burn or smooch a tick as a means of removal, Ibrahim said, because the shock on the tick will cause it to immediately inject any microbe it may be carrying.

To remove a tick, grasp it with clean tweezers as close to the skin as possible, and gently, but firmly pull straight out. Do not twist or jerk the tick. It is important the head of the tick is removed from the skin. If experiencing difficulty, seek out your primary care manager.

Insects that are just plain avoidable due to their poisonous nature

Some insects, though beneficial to nature in its own way, should just be left alone.

Yes, there are insects, such as fire ants, wasps and urticating caterpillars that can cause quite a bit of pain with their stings, but these do not hold enough poison to cause serious reactions, unless a person is allergic.

Some arachnids pack quite a punch. Not fatal, but to the point where seeking a health care provider is necessary.

The poisonous arachnids in this area include the Black Widow and the Brown Recluse spiders and scorpions.

Black Widow and Brown Recluse

Black Widows and Brown Recluses are typically found in warm, damp, dark areas such as corners of gazebos and outdoor bathrooms, Ibrahim said. These spiders, like most, are fairly shy and non-aggressive, meaning it will not actively attack a person.

These are typically small spiders, growing to about the size of a quarter including legs. The Black Widow is easily identifiable. It is shiny black with a red hour-glass marking on its abdomen.

If bitten, Ibrahim recommends seeking medical attention as soon as possible.

Scorpion

Scorpions in this area typically live in the semi-plain areas, like around creek banks. Scorpions, typically brownish in color, can grow up to eight inches.

Scorpions are nocturnal so during the day, it can be found hiding under rocks or foliage.

The best way to avoid being stung, Ibrahim said, is to not extend your hands to move rocks or foliage without looking.

If stung, seek medical treatment.

In the event one of these arachnids gets into the home, check your family for bites and keep them out of the area.

"If you have the courage, you can take care of it yourself," he said. "These arachnids won't just attack."

If someone has been bitten by a Black Widow, Brown Recluse or scorpion, it is best to capture the insect responsible if it can be done safely. Take it with you to the doctor in a tightly sealed container for more accurate identification.

The last group worth mentioning briefly aren't insects or arthropods at all - they are reptiles.

According to Ibrahim, there are at least four types of poisonous snakes in this area that should be avoided. The Eastern diamond back, the Eastern coral snake, the Southern copperhead and the Florida cottonmouth.

Most snakes, like spiders and scorpions, are non-aggressive unless provoked or threatened. If you encounter a snake, back away and do not provoke it.

If bitten, seek medical treatment immediately.

ABOUT ROACH TRAPS

There are different types of cockroach baits that are commercially available as bait stations, bait gels and granular baits. Cockroach bait stations and gels are recommended for use indoors, but they can also be used outdoors. Granular baits are recommended for use outdoors, garage and attic areas where cockroach breed and hide. These baits contain chemicals that are both attractive and lethal to cockroaches. They are safe to use in kitchens or other areas in the house where cockroaches are found, but they must be kept out of reach of children and pets, Ibrahim said. One of the most effective brands is called Maxforce FC Roach Bait Station, MAXforce FC Roach Gel and Maxforce Granular Insect Bait.

HOW DO YOU GET RID OF FLEAS?

Since most flea problems originate from infested cats or dogs, elimination of fleas from the pets is the first and most important step, Ibrahim said. Most veterinarians can provide flea control services for your pets. Fleas can be controlled by using approved insecticide that kill adult fleas, and Insect Growth Regulator (or IGR) which prevents flea eggs from hatching. Some of these flea control products are commercially available in the forms of powders, dips, sprays, collars and shampoos. The most effective way to control fleas indoors is to use the insecticides and IGR together to eliminate adult fleas and prevent further infestation from eggs. Before using any insecticide, however, it is important to read the label and follow the instructions, he said. When applying flea control products inside the house, attention should be paid to areas where the pets sleep or spend most of their time. Pet blankets or rugs should be discarded or laundered in hot, soapy water. All carpeted areas and upholstered furniture should be thoroughly vacuumed and the vacuum bag discarded.

The band was followed by rapper David Norberry, a.k.a Cali Jonez, with his original song, "Warrior," about his love for the Army.

After that was Sgt. Mac Wilson, singing "Life So Long," followed by Osirus.

A song and dance routine followed the comedian, given by Nika Hinton. Spc. Romond "Rob" Robinson was up next rapping "Y'all Don't Want It."

Sunja Harris then took the stage with a song called "Open My Heart." After her song, Crawford was up to sing "Stand."

Hoffman and her boyfriend, Josh Geiger then performed their romantic duet, which was followed by Carter's gospel piece.

Rock band Deranged Minds took up the last moments of the show, performing two songs which evoked excited shouts and cheering from the audience.

It was Deranged Minds who took home first place and $300 for their performance. Norberry came in second for his emotional rhyme and claimed his prize of $200. Wilson was third, getting $100 for his work.

Once the prizes were awarded, Deranged Minds played an encore for the crowd in celebration of its victory.

"I'm going to use the money to get a new tattoo and to pay some bills," said Aaron Putnam, Deranged Minds drummer.

Up for some wild fish tales?

It's time to look back over the past year and focus on what I believe is one of the most ingenious and all-over cool films ever made. You might have seen it — you might even be like me and have seen it more than a couple of times. But since people have been asking me if this movie is worth a look, I will say it now...

Big Fish is worth it.

It's not quite what you'd expect from Tim Burton. When you think Tim Burton, you probably think Ed Wood, Sleepy Hollow, Edward Scissorhands, The Nightmare Before Christmas. You probably think dark, weird, creepy.

But there's something else about Burton films. They're intelligent and, most of the time, make you think on several different levels. Not to mention his signature sets packed with the imaginative and fantastic.

That's Big Fish. It's at once visually staggering, intellectually stimulating, and leaves you feeling good at the end.

This is a movie about a man (Edward Bloom, played by Ewan McGregor) who takes the experiences of his life and makes grand stories out of them. Like a expert chef, he takes the basics of his memories and adds other ingredients and spices to them, transforming them into masterpieces ready to be served upon the grand table of storytelling.

There's the story of how he found his wife-to-be — performing in a circus, dodging bullets, and fighting off a deranged werewolf (played by Danny DeVito).

And the story of how he got out of the Army to be with the love of his life came to involve secret missions, heroic acts, and beautiful Korean twins literally joined at the hip.

At the end of his life, Bloom (now older, played by Albert Finney) is known for those fanciful stories, which are filled to the brim with all sorts of classic fairy-tale themes. His son Will (Billy Crudup), who has lived his entire life hearing his father's stories, and is now in his 30s, is sick of them. He feels he has been lied to, and he doesn't know who his dad is at all.

The more I watch this film, the more I see that I didn't before. There are things in Big Fish that everyone can love, not just Tim Burton fans.

The DVD has a director commentary that's very entertaining, and lots of fun hidden stuff. Next time you're out trying to find a movie to rent, check out Big Fish!

the Missoula Children's Theatre came and got 50 some kids to work together to perform a show for people," said Amy Gillon.

"My daughter was in the play. It was a cute play for her to participate in so I had to come and support her," said Lisa Alexander.

The kids performed an hour and a half show of the Snow White play for the public and relished a chance to have the opportunity to perform.

"It was really fun," said Bekah Taylor, student/dwarf leader Bob. "Backstage I was kind of nervous and maybe a little scared but people said that's normal and helped support you to get through the performance."

Given the opportunity to perform again many kids agree acting is worth it and offer value words of encouragement to others considering it.

"If you try it, who knows, you may just like it," said Joel Melandez, student/dwarf.

"You'll never know if you don't try, so I'd say to give it a shot."

"I just moved recently to Fort Stewart, and didn't really know many people, so being in a play is a great way to meet many kids in your area and also have fun," Taylor said.

The Missoula Children's Theatre was founded in 1972 and currently has 34 teams of actor/directors traveling across the country meeting with kids and performing for their local communities.

The organization's goal is that it hopes that by exposing more kids to theater, kids will realize there are more things out there for them to get into besides sports.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

United in religion can accomplish much

Chaplain (1st Lt.) Matthew T. Temple
2/7th Inf. Chaplain

I would like to share with you a story that I heard some time ago. One Sunday Joe's mother hurries into her son's bedroom and wakes him up. "Joe, it's Sunday. Time to get up! Time to get up and go to church! Get up!" Joe mumbles from under the covers, "I don't want to go." "What do you mean you don't want to go?" says the mother. "That's silly. Now get up and get dressed and go to church!"

Joe says, "No, I don't want to go and I'll give you two reasons why I don't want to go." And then he sits up on the bed and continues, "First, I don't like them and second, they don't like me." The mother replies, "That's just plain nonsense. You've got to go to church and I'll give you two reasons why you must. First, you're now forty years old and, second, you're the pastor!"

This pastor could as well be any of the apostles whom Jesus had commissioned to be his witnesses in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria and to the ends of the earth. But we remember that as soon as Jesus left them, they went to the upper room and hid themselves because they were afraid of the Jews. We too are often like that. But what about the charge that Jesus left for us to be his witnesses and to share the Good News of God's love with all humankind?

Let's look at the Bible. God sent Jesus, because He loved us, to do the greatest work for us that anyone has ever done. That work was dying on the Cross for our sins, so that we could be set free. Jesus paid the penalty for all our sins. He died so that we would not have to die. He suffered so that the bondage of sin could be broken. He took our place on the Cross and died for us. Jesus did it all because He loves us. And now he feeds us like the disciples in Emaus giving us his Word and the Bread from Heaven.

This is what is called the Gospel, which means good news. And it is good news indeed, which we should proclaim to everyone by words and deeds and become engaged in ministry. What we may do in ministry may differ, but we should, at least do something.

Through the sacrament of Baptism we received spiritual gifts that we should utilize for the benefit of the community of faith. Spiritual gifts demonstrate the activity of God in our midst. Therefore, we should be involved in many groups and congregations we have on post. Your involvement will bring you into closer relationships with God and each other; and through these living relationships to bring the life-changing message of the gospel of Jesus Christ to others in our Army community. As you find your place of worship in one of our chapels on post you will be loved, encouraged, cared for and empowered to develop spiritually.

When we are united, we can do far greater things than we could ever do alone. It is the power of God that multiplies our effectiveness when we work together to accomplish his purposes. It's time to know us by who, unites us: Jesus Christ. If we are united in Christ, nothing else will ultimately matter. God uses us in powerful ways when we work together. He multiplies our ministry and increases our effectiveness in every possible way.
